

Human trafficking: A Psycho-social and theoretical perspective

Swati Verma*

Sardar Patel University of Police, Security and Criminal Justice Jodhpur, Rajasthan.

*Kanhaiya Lal Khichi

Sardar Patel University of Police, Security and Criminal Justice Jodhpur, Rajasthan.

Abstract

Human trafficking occurs from ancient time and it's the manifestation of slavery that affects mostly children, women and men .It is the third largest organized crime, after drugs and arms trade across the globe. Police officers who are involved in the investigation of this type of crime may be at health risks from exploitation, from attack during visits, environments or intimidation to prevent investigation. Success of any investigating officer depends on how quickly and efficiently he is able to identify the genuine offender at the scene of crime but whole responsibility also depends on victim. If victim will not support during investigation their energy, time and efforts are totally waste. Investigating officer need to know the mental conditions of victim. Now people are more conscious and aware of their rights and increase the demand of duties to investigate a crime and require development of state-of-art skills of the investigating officer.

Keywords: Slavery, Organized crime, Investigation, Trafficking, Victimization